HONGKONG, APRIL 25th, 1971.

As good very frequently comes out of evil, it is by no means unlikely that the Kowloon case will lead to a careful revision of the extradition clause in the Treaty, and in the Ordinance in Hongkong for carrying them out. It is extremely undesirable that there should be any possible doubt upon this subject; as there can be no question that the manner in which we fulfil our obligations to the Chinese Government, to render up criminals escaped from Chinese territory to Hongkong, will have considerable influence upon the Chinese in fulfilling their obligations in the same direction towards us under the extradition clause of the Treaty. If we show a hesitation in accepting the broad and simple meaning of our obligations to render up to you there is good prima facie ground to conclude that we have committed offences on Chinese territory, we may be certain that we shall find a similar hesitation on the part of the Chinese to render up to their Consulate, foreigners who are charged with committing offences in the interior of China. We have ample proof of the astuteness of the Chinese in seeking any point of this nature. At the present day, they are able to obtain the best advice upon all questions of policy and international law; and it is well known that they watch, these questions with eagerness, and seldom lose an opportunity of turning a point in their own favour. They have long been opposed to the extradition clause of the Treaty, and it is probable they will not overlook anything they can urge or work against them. The decision given in the Norddeutsche case is, therefore, of great importance, anything tending to make the Chinese believe that the distinctions and technicalities may be avoided of a valid ground for refusal of rendition, will be a most dangerous precedent to set them. There is less excuse for falling into this error, as the language of the Treaty is of the simplest and plainest nature, and is evidently designed to meet the broad justice of such cases as may arise.

The above is, perhaps, the most important bearing of the decision which has been given by Chief Justice Stirling; especially as in the course of his judgment, he calls very prominent attention to the rule with respect to piracy on the high seas, which renders the criminal jurisdiction of the tribunals of any nation into whose hands he may fall. The danger is, that the Chinese may seize the point in respect to any foreigner taken on the Coast, or under any circumstances where a charge of piracy gensim might be made with plausibility. In the case of a man taken in the act of piracy, the Chinese authorities, if he is resisted, would be justified in killing him, and this right they have before now claimed. But it would be very undesirable that they should be induced to go further, and demand equal rights as to gensim piracy. The result would be that some day we should find a European kept in torture in a Chinese prison, until upon our objecting to the proceeding he is told that, prior to complying with the Consul's demand for the criminal, they were just dispensing the point upon corpus corporis, or whatever may be the equivalent of that in Chinese law, whether the man was guilty of piracy gensim or piracy municipal—and if this intricate question should occupy them a couple of months, in the course of which the unfortunate man should happen to die in jail, according to the Norddeutsche decision, no very great exception could be taken to their action. At all events, we could not possibly declare it to be an absolute evasion of the Treaty, and we should run the risk of tricks such as that generally being played on the Chinese, and we should run the risk of being played with regard to gensim, being of frequent occurrence.

These considerations are in themselves sufficient to point to the necessity of the extradition question being placed upon a basis that will in future prevent the possibility of any misunderstanding on the subject, as it is impossible for us to claim from the Chinese that unhesitating recognition of their duty to bring foreign subjects up before their Consuls, if we do not fulfil our obligations towards them in the like spirit. The approaching revision of the Treaty of Tientsin will afford a fitting opportunity for placing this question beyond the possibility of doubt in future. It will be easy to make changes at present existing more definite, and to pass a local Ordinance in Hongkong for carrying out the terms agreed to with certainty and effect; and it may be hoped that the point will be represented to the House authorities with a view to attaining this object. At all events, there can be no reason why an explanatory Ordinance should not be at once passed in Hongkong, to avoid the possibility of doubt in the future upon this important point. It cannot be overlooked that the issues involved in this matter are far more extended than in their bearing merely upon Hongkong; and although the China and Japan is not justified in looking beyond the strict law of the place, it is highly desirable that law should be speedily amended, when it is found that there is a likelihood of its clashing with Imperial interests of vital importance.

MUSIC IN HONGKONG.

Not an unbroken earthly sound.
The principal and only point which presents itself, even to the most careful reader, when perusing the letter of "The Cornet player in Wyndham Street," is that he is just as much at home in writing the English language as he is in blowing a trumpet; and if the same amount of care and study has been bestowed on learning each, shall he be wrong in saying that he has not spent all his years in vain?
In the former communication addressed to your paper, I omitted to narrate my first introduction to this cornet playing enthusiasm. Dining out one evening, my cooling was proceeding with me along Wyndham Street, when a sudden blast from some wind instrument, which was playing "The Cornet player in Wyndham Street," arrested my attention. I was so struck by the sound, that I turned round, and saw a young man, who was playing the cornet, and who was looking at me with a very friendly expression. He was a young man of about 20 years of age, and he was dressed in a very smart and fashionable manner. He was playing the cornet with a very good effect, and he was looking at me with a very friendly expression. He was a young man of about 20 years of age, and he was dressed in a very smart and fashionable manner. He was playing the cornet with a very good effect, and he was looking at me with a very friendly expression.

"let down" nearly so gently as a "Cornet player in Wyndham Street" was in my last communication.
I have been informed upon good authority that the Acting Colonial Surgeon has sent in a report to the Government setting forth the necessity of some being put to this "State of affairs."

On the ground that the former Acting Assistant Commissioner of Police, now Paymaster, has been allowed a house in Wyndham Street, and the security of his accounts is likely to be affected if he is continually subjected to this "State of affairs."

By the way, why should that ill-used little gentleman, who "rides the high horse," be compelled to exist like a "serpent of police," when the Acting Assistant something has a separate house found him?" In the pastor, "The cornet player makes a most damaging admission when he denies, being a beggar. The residents in Hongkong, in whose interests I speak, were under the impression that he was a learner. This misapprehension removed, one tempted to wonder how any other than the very best business could make such a noise, and one may add that it is less excusable that ever after the above playing. What has the gentleman been doing for many years, with no pretence as such an admission to his neighbours as a beggar, and after all so little profit to himself?

If, I should recommend him to give up an instrument for which he has no talent. One thing, surprise me, and it is that so small an object should be able to make such a noise, and one may add that it is less excusable that ever after the above playing. What has the gentleman been doing for many years, with no pretence as such an admission to his neighbours as a beggar, and after all so little profit to himself?

Being perfectly acquainted with the nationality of the gentleman who blows, I will make no reply whatever to his insinuation: "Political Feudings."

to certain am I that I want to speak at on this point, I should find it impossible to do so, as the gentleman who blows, I will make no reply whatever to his insinuation: "Political Feudings."

"The Cornet player in Wyndham Street" asserts that he is living under English law, and that he is not subject to the law of the country in which he is living. He is, however, subject to the law of the country in which he is living, and he is not subject to the law of the country in which he is living.

One of our Correspondents in Paris sends us an account of an incident which occurred there on Monday, a Prussian Count, who has charge of the administration of the Prussian railways, entered the city in order to visit some of the wounded German who he knew to be in hospital. Upon reaching the gate at Montmartre, he and his companion, a well-known journalist of St. Denis, were surrounded by a captain of the National Guard to give an account of themselves. Identified with their names, he made prisoners of them, and told them they must accompany him to the Committee of Public Safety.

A furious mob had meanwhile gathered round, which followed the Count and his companion, and threatened for their lives. Both were struck more than once, and the Prussian gentleman received some severe injuries. The official before whom they were taken, and who would to screen them from the fury of the people, and after a long delay, during which attempts were made to break in the door, the prisoners were conducted to the Prefect of Police, and thence to a place of safety.

The debate upon the Treaty in the French Assembly, was very interesting, and the members having denounced the Emperor Napoleon in several terms, a violent scene occurred, in which the German deputies played a conspicuous part. The Count, who was in the service of the Emperor Napoleon, endeavored, but in vain, to obtain a hearing, and ultimately the sitting was suspended for a quarter of an hour. The debate of the Emperor, for the invasion, the ruin, and the dismemberment of France. The discussion of the Treaty was then resumed. Victor Hugo and Louis Blanc spoke against the Treaty, and the latter maintained that it was still possible to carry on the war. After the decision, the deputies for Alsace, the Meuse, and the Moselle entered a protest, and the Count resigned their seats in the Assembly.

A telegram from our Special Correspondent in Vienna, dated 22nd inst., states that the German party there are determined to resist the peace, and that the Austrian and Federal powers protest against them.
